CHR Northern VA Working Group
Fall 2021

Northern Virginia has a complex history, one that not many of those who live here actually know. And yet these histories (of colonization and racial violence, immigration and innovation) shape our everyday existence in subtle but significant ways.

Does your current or future research engage the history, politics, landscapes (natural, ecological, demographic, technological, memorial), economics, inequalities, immigration patterns, languages, religious communities, or narrative traditions of Northern Virginia?

If so, you are invited to join a working group at the CHR on our region. We aim to bring an interdisciplinary group of scholars together to identify overlapping research interests and develop collaborative projects, including public humanities initiatives.

Please email us at chr@gmu.edu if you are interested in taking part in this working group.
